Do you know fairness means acting in an honest manner? Another meaning for fairness is serving justice, equality to others, no matter race, religion social class. Justice has affected my life in a positive way but some experiences have made me cry. For example in 2014 my brother died, I was heartbroken. The crime was closed by the time they found the people. The police were very nice to us. When the case went to the Supreme Court for my brother's case the men that killed him were found guilty. I remember the night that it happened; it was Friday and it was very cold outside. My mom and I cried for days, and those days turned into months. Soon after we finally come to peace with knowing that justice was served and he is now in a better place.

In the Supreme Court, the people in charge of killing my brother were sentenced to life without parole. We still could not believe he was gone, however, we found comfort in knowing justice was served and given to my brother and our family. That one night affected my whole life.

I realized as I got older, everything that I went through, and the courage and strength that was in me to continue living life after my brother's death. I am able to live my life to the fullest, because not only do I wake up everyday and make strides for myself, I wake up everyday to make strides for my brother and my mom. They are my motivation to keep going. When I think about my brother I think about him seeing me laugh and play basketball. I will live my best life for him. He is the reason I've made the best choices that can make me successful. I know each day he is looking down me, probably laughing at me, most of the time, but I know he is proud each and every day.

The justice system really helped my family get through a really hard time. Knowing that justice was served and then men who killed my brother are serving their time; brings a different kind of comfort. We know that we can be outside and walk around because we have our local police officers and county judges doing their jobs every day to find justice for all the wrong doing in the world today.
