What justice means to me

To me justice means equality, fairness and righteous. Justice is a word of protection. When I hear the word justice I feel and know the importance that comes with it. To realize and imagine what it was like back then is horrible. But thanks to the people in our past that assured most of us with justice will forever be remembered. Such as Martin Luther king jr., Rosa parks and so much more people. The amount of braveness they had was amazing. Justice wasn't just handed out, it was fought for. Boycotts were formed, black lives matter protest was made and many more protests. Women didn't have justice. They didn't have much privileges. They couldn't vote like men, they didn't have much choices for jobs like men did and had less opportunities. So they made protests to fight back. Which brought us here today. And I am grateful for that. Justice is maybe still being fought for today. Movies, songs and even articles are made discussing what's going on nowadays. For example the movie "the hate you give" and the song by Joyner Lucas " I am not racist" both has a deep messages behind them. And also gives you a different point of view. Justice is not a word you throw around and joke with. It's is a safe word a word. Justice is a word to believe in some people needed justice back then. People wouldn't be safe without justice. I don't understand why people had to fight for justice. It's wrong. Everyone should have the same rights and should be treated the same. As time went on the progress of justice increased and is still increasing today. So when someone asks me "what does justice mean to you?" My response will always be justice is freedom.
