What Justice Means to Me

Justice can mean many things to many people. It can mean to have equal rights no matter who you are. It can mean you can fight for what you want. Also it can identify what you can and can't do.

Justice to me, is to be treated equally no matter who you are, what skin color you are, or what gender you like. No one should fear to reveal who they are because they feel they are going to be treated differently. As far as skin color, what's the point in treating someone differently because they are darker or lighter? Everyone is a skin tone dark or light, it makes no difference just because someone is darker or lighter. Skin color doesn't prove that a person is more or less valuable than any other person.

The freedom to like whatever gender you want is a very important subject to me since I see there's a lot of people treated very differently because they like the same sex as them or both. I like the opposite sex, so I'm straight. Being straight doesn't mean I have to be against those who like the same gender as themselves. People shouldn't make fun of others due to who they like. Many people right now at every second or minute around the world aren't able to express themselves because of those who think they are better because they are somehow superior based on being different from their victim's.

Justice is powerful. Justice provides the power for people in our world to be able to show who they are and not fear it. If I could share one thing, I want people to live their true life. Don't hide, embrace yourself to the world ahead of you. Live the life you want. Be the person you want to be.
